Features & Amenities

- City landmark

Facts

- The eminent architectural photographer Richard Nickel died while recording the building's demolition, when part of the structure collapsed on him.
- The design, by architect Louis Sullivan, featured a strong cornice, projecting window bays, and an elaborately carved entrance archway.
- The stenciled trading room was one of the architect's masterworks, and has been relocated to the Art Institute of Chicago.
- The arch from the main entrance has also been preserved, and stands outside the Art Institute at Columbus & Monroe.
- One of the classic works of early skyscraper design, with a highly textured and open façade.
- Replaced by the 30 North LaSalle office building.
