Facts

- A small greenhouse with staggered corners projects from the center of the east side, with space for restaurant seating.
- The building is built over part of the south train platforms of Union Station.
- With its curving green glass wall that follows the river, this building's design is an inverted variation on 333 West Wacker.
- The curved profile of the riverfront facade is repeated on the west side, where a plaza runs the length of the building.
