Facts

- The two stairways project from the north and south facades, leading down to shoe-shaped projections at ground level.
- Tallest building in the historic Lockerbie Square neighborhood, just northeast of downtown.
- This senior citizens' high-rise is named for John J. Barton, mayor of Indianapolis from 1964-1967.
- At the 15th floor the building's width increases to support larger units on the top 6 floors.
- The fin walls outside the community room on the 15th floor are perforated by doorways which connect the passageways into one long balcony on each side.
- This was the first public housing high-rise in Indianapolis, which until then was one of the largest cities in the United States with no high-rise public housing at all.
